Georgia Meeting

Chester Doles, a stalwart National Alliance member of many years' standing, who has stood strong even under severe persecution for his racial loyalty and activism, recently hosted a preliminary re-organizational meeting — at the same meeting hall he built in the early 2000s, where William Pierce spoke to his Local Unit in 2002. Here is his report on the meeting:

Today, Saturday, April 25th, I am happy to report that 12 people attended our first meeting here in north Georgia in 13 years. Three former Alliance members and nine prospective recruits enjoyed a very positive and productive meeting.

We actually picked up from where our minutes ended 13 years ago, and fast forwarded to the present. We listened to the first half of the recent American Dissident Voices broadcast, "The Great Task," and I read Dr. Pierce's essay "The Meaning and Importance of Loyalty." Everyone enjoyed a lively discussion and we set a date for our next meeting. We are all very excited to be active once again. I personally handed each person a membership application — so expect mine and several others in the mail soon.

Our gathering was a family event. While the meeting was going on there were about a dozen beautiful blond-haired children running around the yard having fun. I pointed out the children to the gathered adults and said, "They are why we're here. Any questions?" Everyone understood the point and agreed. At the cookout afterwards there was much conversation about our people's current situation and of how we can rebuild the National Alliance.

Respectfully, Chester J. Doles.

Chairman Williams responds: Thank you for that report, Mr. Doles. You set a fine example for other former members who now want to get involved in Alliance activism again.

More Media Coverage

The Sunday, April 26 edition of the Kansas City Star newspaper featured a seriously inaccurate and rather naive article purporting to inform its readers about the state of the White nationalist "movement."

Chairman Williams was interviewed by a Star reporter, but much of the material dealing with the Alliance was sourced directly from Jewish groups hostile to us. The result was an article that was focused on falsely linking the Alliance to "domestic terrorism." The piece featured a photograph of Dr. Pierce's 40-year-old novel The Turner Diaries, with the familiar decades-old boilerplate from Jewish "hate watchdog" groups telling the Star's readers how "dangerous" the Alliance is. Chairman Williams was misquoted or quoted out of context several times in the article, but a few of the quotes were accurate:

When asked why he resigned from the Alliance in 2002, Williams said, "I didn't like the direction things were going with all the skinheads. It was getting away from us."

That is true, and an accurate quote.

As for what he sees as the current state of the movement, Williams said: "The movement sucks, as far as I'm concerned. It's in disarray. It's all over the board. It's all on the Internet; you're dealing with a bunch of anonymous people and you don't know who they are."

Accurate again, and true.

"Kevin [Strom] and I want to get back to a real-world organization," Williams told The Star. "The National Alliance attracted a good cross section [of] normal Americans."

That is factual — and we will attract more such Americans to our ranks once again.

Williams scoffs at the Christian Identity theology that many [W]hite nationalists adhere to. "It's just not grounded in reality," he said. "It's crazy. I questioned it all the time. We're rational. We don't go into that 'we're the true Jews' nonsense."

That's another accurate statement; the Alliance does not endorse that ideology. That is not to say that nominal Christians are not eligible to be Alliance members. Most of us were raised as traditional Christians — including Dr. William Pierce, the founder of the National Alliance and the originator of Cosmotheism, the spiritual basis of our ideology.

Williams said he isn't fond of militias and doesn't associate with them. "They're cranks," he said, adding that they tend to be Christian-oriented. "I send them to Aryan Nations or the Council of Conservative Citizens. We really try to reach out beyond the movement to normal people."

That's right. If a man tells us he wants to join a Christian organization that's based on Christian principles -- however he may see them -- then we will steer him to an organization where he will be more comfortable.

Some [organizations], like the Ku Klux Klan, say they are Christian-based. The neo-Nazi Aryan Nations has its roots in Christian Identity, which teaches that Jews are the descendants of Satan and Blacks have no souls. The leader of the National Alliance describes himself as a [C]osmotheist...

Those are the Star reporter's words, and, yes, the National Alliance's ideology — and its chairman's — are Cosmotheist. That's one of the many things that set us apart from the freak show "movement" that the Kansas City Star and the Jewish "watchdogs" clumsily lump us in with.

Telephone System on The Land

Under the former management of the Alliance, the telephone lines at our offices in West Virginia were disconnected and out of service for at least two years. Cell phone reception on the mountain is atrocious, so communicating with our staff there this year has been challenging, to say the least. Staff could go to the Hillsboro library, hook up a laptop, and communicate to our Tennessee offices and other staffers by email, at least!

One phone line has now been reconnected — and we have a computer online there. That's progress. But the previous telephone/intercom system that was installed in the 1980s is obsolete and no longer functioning properly today.

Lana Williams at work in the National Office

We researched what is available that will meet our needs going forward, and decided on a state-of-the-art industrial telephone/intercom system, capable of expanding to meet our future growth. We are grateful to generous member C.L. in Ohio who purchased this system for us. This is a nearly $2,000 improvement to our West Virginia offices. Our telephone number will be published in next month's BULLETIN after the new system is connected and fully tested.

Introducing Lana Williams

Svetlana "Lana" Williams, wife of Chairman Will Williams, is the backbone of the National Alliance membership office in Tennessee. Lana processes all mail, handles email inquiries to businessoffice@natall.com, and performs data entry — keeping up with members' dues, bank deposits, paying bills, etc. Lana is a graduate of Moscow University and has training as an accountant, so knows how to keep a proper general ledger. Lana is very organized — unlike the Chairman who is usually dealing with the larger issues of the National Alliance. Together, and with an occasional helper, they stuff, stamp, seal and mail these Alliance BULLETINS at the end of each month — and neither receives a salary for any of this work, by the way.

It was through Lana's initiative that we undertook the mailing of nearly 2,500 introductory National Alliance BULLETINs to addresses in an unorganized database of former members, customers, and supporters. That mailing has already netted several dozen former members rejoining. More than six hundred envelopes from that mass First Class mailing were returned to us as undeliverable for one reason or another; people die, people move. Lana took the initiative again to track the people whose BULLETINs were returned by using Internet services like White Pages and People Finder. It's remarkable how many people can be located this way, since old addresses are often listed, which can then be cross-checked against the addresses in the old database. Re-mailing the BULLETINs to former members who had moved to new addresses that Lana discovered has netted enough additional members rejoining our Alliance to have made all of that effort worthwhile.

Donations and Needs

Member G.W. in Virginia recently donated a much needed, practically new Ryobi circular saw to the Alliance. Chairman Williams has donated a microwave oven, assorted furniture, a porch swing, a two-year old Husqvarna self-propelled push mower, a sturdy eight-foot Werner fiberglass step ladder, a chain saw, a bow saw, several electrical cords and lights, and other assorted tools too numerous to mention.

All donations of tools, furniture, and anything that will make life easier and more comfortable for staff on The Land will be appreciated. A few of the most needed items presently are:

- Water hoses
- Garden tools
- Tiller
- Dependable riding lawnmower
- We also need at least one new computer to replace the clunky model we're using that's at least 12 years old.

In addition to material needs are services, most urgent presently being those of a professional electrician and a plumber. Until we send out and get back membership surveys telling us what skills we have available from our members, we will be dependent on local commercial service providers to help us with pressing problems that need attention.

Of course we need the services of other tradesmen — like carpenters and others in order to maintain our infrastructure — and we also need the services of attorneys and accountants to deal with legal issues and the taxing authorities.

False Claims

It has come to our attention that the group of six former members that sued former Chairman Erich Gliebe for $2 million in an effort to claim National Alliance assets for themselves has been contacting current Alliance members by phone, letters, and email, smearing the current leadership as "insane thieves," among other nasty accusations, blustering about how they will be taking over the West Virginia property and other assets soon (supposedly when their now frivolous lawsuit is "settled" — though they don't indicate who it is they think they will "settle" with, nor precisely what it is they want to "settle"). Here we are, six months into the new era of the National Alliance, yet these malcontents are still trying to raise money to pay their lawyer to pursue the pipe dream of having a court dissolve the National Alliance and turn its assets over to them. That is not going to happen. They need to start their own organization since they decided to burn their bridges with ours.

If any members are contacted by these individuals, please let the National Office know about it. Forward letters to our Tennessee mailing address, or send emails to alliancechairman@natall.com.

Correspondence

Here is a small sampling of the correspondence that has been filling our National Office mailbox this month:

Chairman Williams: The BULLETIN looks like old times. I hope you've heard from a lot of old supporters of Dr. Pierce. — Dr. Ed Fields, Georgia Fellow National Alliance Members: I read the most recent BULLETIN and I am ecstatic that plans are in the works to resume book sales. I have always believed that educating members and potential members will be a cornerstone of our ultimate success.

I am also grateful that Kevin Strom is doing such an excellent job with the ADV broadcasts. I haven't been this hopeful about the Alliance in quite a few years.

Respectfully, G.W., Virginia

Commentary by Chairman William White Williams

Staying True to Who We Are

With all the talk about the "White nationalist movement" — and about the Alliance being lumped in with various factions of it, many of them entirely incompatible with our own program

Chairman Williams: Your service as Chairman is deeply appreciated. I didn't expect to hear from you on my book order for several more months; what a surprise to see your email in my inbox!

We have a deal then. Tomorrow I'll put a money order for $895.00 [for my bulk order] in the mail to you at Laurel Bloomery.

As for the BULLETINs, I've already received two for January through March 2015, as I had sent in a donation to be a National Alliance supporter. As a former member, I may rejoin in the future and am seriously considering it. That you'd send me BULLETINs is quite an inducement to rejoin; I take the progress updates posted within them as a beginning to regaining my trust in the NA.

A service I have been rendering to our people is to bring Cosmotheism to the attention of like-minded Whites when I can through current events and other related matters. — J.M., Iowa

Chairman Williams: Thank you for your leadership of the National Alliance. I thought when I first joined that the organization was doing great things for people of our race. Then things started to go downhill. It seemed that it went from fighting for our cause to just teaching our children about their heritage. But with no one standing for our cause, what kind of world would they be growing up in? I quit paying membership dues, and started looking elsewhere. Then, one day a BULLETIN came in the mail, announcing a new leader for the National Alliance. He was living in Tennessee where I also live. Chairman Williams, I do agree with your leadership and your plans for the National Alliance. I look forward to meeting you one day and telling you my story. Life has been an interesting journey. Thanks to the writings of Dr. Pierce, my eyes were opened. I hope you continue his legacy.

Next week when I receive my paycheck I will be sending a money order for my $30 pledge and ask you to renew my membership status once again. — C.B., Tennessee and goals — I want to clarify for our members exactly what our policy is. It is based on the policy Dr. Pierce laid out for us in the National Alliance Membership Handbook in 1993, and clarified further in a series of his own BULLETIN commentaries in 2002, just months before he died.

As I told the Kansas City Star on April 26th, the reason I resigned from the National Alliance in 2002 was that I could see the Alliance was getting away from us, and away from Dr. Pierce. There had been an inordinate influx of undisciplined skinheads — many of whom were Identity Christians — mainly as a result of the “White power” music we had been selling through Resistance Records.

When some Alliance members participated in a “unity” rally in York, Pennsylvania in late 2001, the result was a public relations disaster. That event was followed in 2002 by several other rallies at the Israeli and German Embassies in Washington. All these events devolved into ridiculous conflicts between various skinhead factions and “anti-racist” counter-demonstrators. Our image was being tarnished by perceived association with these “movement” demonstrations, and Dr. Pierce was intent on putting an end to participation in them by our members.

In the January 2002 BULLETIN he wrote (emphasis added):

There can be no doubt that we are weak now compared to our enemies, but we will not become stronger by “uniting” with weak or defective organizations — and that includes virtually every “movement” group. The Alliance is not only far and away the strongest and most effective of all the organizations claiming to share our goals: It is the only organization in North America that has any prospect at all for effectively opposing the Jews and their allies in the future. I say this not to disparage any other organization or individual, but as a simple statement of fact.

The Alliance became what it is today by following its own course from its inception. It never saw an opportunity to become stronger by uniting with another organization, and it sees none now.... I am not willing to compromise in any significant way the goals or ideology of the National Alliance.... A member who disagrees with this rather dim view of the “movement” should choose a “movement” organization and join it, or he should start his own organization, but he should resign his membership of the Alliance.

Those are strong words by Dr. Pierce, expressive of what I call his no-nonsense “hard line.” It’s that brutal honesty that attracted me to the Alliance and set it above the “movement” for me. His organizational strategy of attracting the best of our people was being undermined by this growing trend of “unity” with weak or defective organizations.

Dr. Pierce put his foot down and established the following National Office policies governing interactions with “movement” organizations:

- The Alliance will continue to follow its own course and will act independently of other organizations.
- The Alliance will not engage in joint activities with other organizations.
- Individuals who are members of other organizations and who are prospects for recruitment into the Alliance may be invited to attend Alliance meetings or participate in Alliance activities strictly as individuals, not as representatives of the other organization to which they belong.
- The Alliance does not comment publicly on other organizations, either positively or negatively. We do not respond to attacks from other organizations or engage in feuds with other organizations. We have on occasion helped other organizations with extraordinary problems, as when we donated to the legal defense fund of Richard Butler during the time he was being attacked by Morris Dees and the Southern Poverty Law Center, but ordinarily we do not become involved in the problems or activities of other groups. We wish them well, but they are on their own.
- In evaluating prospects for recruitment, we do not disqualify a prospect simply because he belongs to or has belonged to another organization, but we usually will regard his membership or former membership in another organization negatively rather than positively and will be especially alert for signs of hobbyist tendencies. In general, the Alliance is not competing with "movement" organizations for members. A person should join the organization for which he is best suited, and if he is at all tempted to join a "movement" group, then he probably lacks the seriousness, maturity, and good judgment expected of an Alliance member.... In general, the Alliance is not competing with "movement" organizations for members. A person should join the organization for which he is best suited, and if he is at all tempted to join a "movement" group, then he probably lacks the seriousness, maturity, and good judgment expected of an Alliance member.

Though it's hard to believe that anyone could have misunderstood these policies, some members failed to heed them fully, so he clarified the Alliance's position further in the February BULLETIN, discussing "hobbyism," which is defined adequately in the Membership Handbook, but perhaps not grasped by some members:

I did not expect my comments to straighten out any hobbyists remaining in the Alliance, because hobbyism does not come from a lack of understanding but instead from a personality defect. Members are hobbyists because their principle motivation is self-gratification. They care more about getting lots of different newsletters and having more people to gossip about than they do about real accomplishments. They are not sensible people.

For the sake of those members who aren't hobbyists but who may have been confused by hobbyism on the part of other members, I offer here two further comments on the subject. First, we are not interested in "uniting" with "movement" organizations because none is significant or serious. Most are make-believe organizations, which do not exist except in the imaginations of a few hobbyists. The few that actually have members are heavily loaded with freaks, hobbyists, and other defective people who like to wear uniforms and give Roman salutes to TV cameramen while shouting, "Sieg, Heil!"

Second, it is very important for us to maintain our own image as a serious organization so that we can continue to recruit the serious men and women we must have in order to continue building our capabilities. These men and women are not favorably impressed by the sort of silliness that characterizes virtually every wannabee "movement" organization.

Even after all this, there were still members ignoring his admonitions, enabled by some staffers who were ignoring them too. So Dr. Pierce returned to the subject in the March 2002 BULLETIN with a piece entitled "Losers, Hobbyists and the "Movement":

An interesting psychological phenomenon on which I have commented in several issues of the BULLETIN is that displayed by people who send hostile letters to the National Office saying, in effect: "You people claim to be Christians, but you ignore the teachings of the Bible, which says that all races are the same. Don't you even know that Jesus was a Jew?" They have had the idea planted in their heads that the Alliance is some sort of Christian organization, presumably by Jewish propaganda linking us to Christian Identity and Catholic traditionalist groups, which also are on the Jews' hit list. Reading our material or listening to one of my broadcasts should persuade them otherwise, but it doesn't. It probably took quite a bit of effort by the Jews to pound the idea into their heads, and it'll take dynamite to get it out.

Unfortunately, one can observe a similar phenomenon in many people nominally on our side, even in some Alliance members. I have announced over and over again our policy toward other organizations, and I nevertheless continue to receive letters to the effect: "All of us in the 'movement' must stick together. We should unite with all of the other patriotic organizations, and then we'll be much stronger, etc." To me this view indicates either hobbyism or a serious deficiency in the writer's powers of discrimination. If you don't remember what hobbyism is, re-read section 3 c. iii.2 of your copy of the Membership Handbook.

We will reissue our Membership Handbook to members in good standing once we have the funds and means to do so, but what Dr. Pierce was saying here should be understood by everyone reading this BULLETIN. As Dr. Pierce once told his cadre: "I don't want 'movement' people, I want virgins." By that he meant the normal people who have no attraction for the Ku Klux Klan, the National Socialist Movement, Aryan Nations, or the prison gangs that the Kansas City Star and Jewish groups still insist on lumping in with our Alliance. Dr. Pierce concluded:

It's a little hard to say exactly what the term "movement" means to the Internet gossips. To most, it seems to be a clubby sort of concept which includes all of "us" and excludes everyone else. Although I have found the term useful in some contexts in the past, it probably should be abandoned because it has been so badly misused by the hobbyists. Really, what self respecting racial nationalist wants to be considered part of a "movement" which includes all of the phone-booth Fuhrers, the Internet gossips, and an embarrassing high quota of born losers?

It's easy enough to understand this club mentality. As our society disintegrates under the onslaught of Jew-instigated multiculturalism, people look for something to hold onto: a sense of belonging, of community. We feel more secure when we have a sense of solidarity with others of like mind. A comforting sense of security is not the primary thing that Alliance members should be seeking, however. We want strength. We want new capabilities. We want to gain an advantage over the enemies of our people. We want anything which brings us closer to victory, whether it is comfortable or not.

The truth of the matter is, there's not much advantage to be gained inside the "movement." It is too heavily freighted with chronic losers, incurable hobbyists, phone-booth Fuhrers, and other defectives. Perhaps the "movement" is no worse than the general public in this regard, but we're looking for the best and strongest people we can find, and we find them much more often outside the "movement" than inside it. It is time for all members who have been focused on the "movement" either to reorient themselves in an outward direction or to find another organization to devote themselves to. As our tempo and our work load increase, being in the Alliance will be less and less fun for those whose primary aim is to amuse themselves with "movement" gossip. And I will have less patience with hobbyists and with those who believe that the

The disgraceful August 2002 protest on the Capitol grounds, complete with uniformed hobbyists.

Alliance is part of the "movement." Our aim is not to be the biggest and best organization in the "movement"; it is to leave the "movement" to its clubby introspection while we get on with the job of building a revolutionary infrastructure.

Had Dr. Pierce lived longer, his 2002 purge of "movement" types might have been brought to a successful conclusion. Instead, just a month after his death, his illegitimate successors involved the Alliance in yet another dysfunctional and appalling "unity" event, a rally on the Capitol lawn in Washington.

There is not much I can add to Dr. Pierce's 2002 commentaries, except to say that as National Alliance Chairman in 2015 I will adhere to the same policy that set our Alliance apart and above the "movement" from the 1970s to the end of the last century. Some of our old-timers will recall those days.

We will continue the necessary purifying work that William Pierce began in 2002. As we do so, we gain confidence that the National Alliance's greatest days are ahead of us, not behind.
